Charity is the practice of giving help, money, or time to people who are in need, reflecting deep values of human compassion. In Algerian society, charity takes many wonderful forms, such as distributing food baskets to poor families during Ramadan, collecting school supplies for orphans, and running blood donation campaigns. We can easily help poor people by volunteering with local charity clubs, donating clothes, or supporting community-based solidarity initiatives. Solidarity is crucially important for our community because it reduces poverty, bridges social gaps, and fosters a powerful sense of unity and brotherhood among citizens. By standing together, we build a safer and more prosperous society.
